

Norton Rose Fulbright becomes a Climate Bonds Partner

15:00 GMT 09/03/16 LONDON: High profile international law and advisory firm Norton Rose Fulbright, has today become a Climate Bonds Initiative Partner.

The decision is reflective of the growing profile of green bonds as a potential source of climate finance, sustainable investment and continuing integration within mainstream debt market operations.

Simon Currie, Global Head of Energy, Norton Rose Fulbright:

“Norton Rose Fulbright has a long standing commitment to social responsibility and sustainability. Our relationship with Climate Bonds Initiative is indicative of the significance we place on climate, energy and low carbon transition.

“Climate Bonds plays an active role in international discourse on the development of new market-based climate finance solutions. Joining the Partnership Programme gives us an opportunity to increase our engagement with an active participant on these critical issues.”

Sean Kidney, CEO Climate Bonds:

“Norton Rose Fulbright have supported many Climate Bonds events including our State of the Market 2015 launch and our clean energy finance and market development roundtables. This support is one reflection of their extensive policy and practical experience particularly around energy, sustainability and climate areas.”

“We’re very excited to have Norton Rose Fulbright join adding their depth and capability to our Partners Program. We anticipate working more broadly with them on the development of sustainable green bond markets.”
